Additional Study Group Added to Spring

The below study group has been added to the Spring semester:

389 Market Theory: Past and Present

Fridays: 11:45 AM - 1:15 PM 8 weeks, Starting March 6

In this study group, members will review classical to modern technical theories and practices for characterizing Bull and Bear market profiles in order to be timely (when to buy and sell) with your investments. Members will explore practical market indicators for Bull and Bear markets with nominal access to a charting service website to time their favorite stocks. OLLI does not endorse particular products or financial advice from Study Group Leaders.

This study group is a repeat

Class Format: Discussion

Hours of Reading: No required reading Study Group Leader(s): William Metler

With a PhD in systems engineering, Bill Metler spent 40 years in research and development for AT&T Bell Laboratories, Aerospace Corporation, and the Pentagon, specializing in computerized system modeling for new methods in problem solving from deep sea to deep space with emphasis on system performance. During this time, he became fascinated with theories for stock-market modeling and timing of trades (buy & sell) for multi-year big swings.

Next Week's Lectures

There is still space remaining in next week's Tuesday and Thursday lectures. Please see below for information about each lecture and to register:

Kenneth D. Ackerman

Trotsky in New York, 1917

Tuesday, January 14—10:00-11:00 AM 4801 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room A (1st floor)

One hundred and three years ago this month, an unknown radical who had been thrown out of Russia, Austria, and France turned up in in refugee-friendly America. Less than a year later, Leon Trotsky was the co-leader of the Bolshevik Revolution. Ken Ackerman has traced the 10 weeks that Lev Davidovich Trotsky spent in the Bronx. Trotsky, son of a Russian farmer, arrived in the city an unknown revolutionary barely speaking a few phrases of English. He dove into American socialist politics, gave over thirty speeches against American entry into the First World War, and barely escaped British Intelligence trying to reach Petrograd and join the 1917 upheavals. He left his mark on all the places he went.

Ken Ackerman, author, historian, and Washington lawyer, has authored five major books on Americana, including his most recent, Trotsky in New York 1917: A Radical on the Eve of Revolution. When not writing, Ken practices law in Washington at Olsson Frank Weeda Terman Matz PC, specializing in agriculture risk management.

The Rewards of Being an SGR

It's temptation time again. The new OLLI February Shorts and Spring Catalog is on the way to our mailboxes and the question is how many study groups can one handle. But as you fill out your registration form, or register online, I urge you to check off the box volunteering to be a Study Group Representative (SGR) for that group. I have done so for all of my study groups for the almost nine years I have been an OLLI member and it is an experience that has enriched those years because it has helped me to easily know my fellow study group members as I have their email and telephone contacts and reasons to contact them. Shortly after the Lottery for each session, SGR Coordinators contact those who have volunteered to confirm them being SGR. If there are no volunteers, we call people on the attendance list to ask if they'd be willing.

SGR duties are light and rarely take more than a few minutes for each study group session. Before the semester starts, SGRs receive the contact information for the class and are welcome to send out an e-mail introducing themselves (you don't have to type in all those email addresses, as the office sends a link to e-mail the entire class). At each class session, the SGR makes any necessary announcements and passes out the attendance sheet (or has people check off their name as they arrive). At the end of the class, the SGR counts the number of attendees for that session and writes it at the bottom of that day's column. If someone has missed the first two sessions, you have the chance to contact them to see if they'll be attending, and thus establish more personal contact (the office reminds you when it's time to do this). It's easy and natural. Shortly before the end of the semester, the office will put thank you cards into the class folders for class members to sign. Optional donations are also collected as a gift since our study group leaders are volunteers.

Click here for the full list of SGR duties, which is sent to SGRs shortly before each session starts. If you have any questions or would like to discuss this more with me, please contact me at:

WINTER EXHIBITIONS & EVENTS AT THE AU MUSEUM-KATZEN ARTS CENTER

Open Tuesday-Sunday, 11:00 AM - 4:00 PM Free and fully accessible

Heroes & Losers: The Edification of Luis Lorenzana January 25-March 15, 2020

Luis Lorenzana (b. 1979) is a self-taught Filipino artist whose background in politics has infused his work with a cynicism that belies his longing for a kinder, more equitable world. The exhibition thus touches on the themes of a desperate kind of selfless heroism—and the all-too familiar failure of a democratic political system. These are works that will have relevance to the current American landscape; indeed, to anywhere in the world.

Communicating Vessels: Ed Bisese, Elyse Harrison, Wayne Paige Presented by the Alper Initiative for Washington Art January 25-March 15, 2020

The title of this exhibition is borrowed from that of a book written in 1932 by Surrealist poet André Breton (1896-1966), who in turn had borrowed it from a scientific experiment of the same name. The experiment shows that in two vessels joined by a tube, a gas or liquid passing from one to the other rises to the same level, whatever the shape of the vessel. For Breton, the phrase refers to the artist, whether literary or visual, whose work results from communication between the inner life of the mind, emotions and dreams, and the waking perception of the exterior world. The three artists in this exhibition all work from this premise, although with individual styles and imagery. While their work shows continuity with Surrealist ideas of the 1930s and 40s, it also relates to the Chicago Imagists of the 1960s and 70s, reflecting the prevalence of surrealist imagery in contemporary visual art.

Landscape in an Eroded Field: Carol Barsha, Heather Theresa Clark, Artemis Herber January 25-March 15, 2020

Landscape in an Eroded Field brings together three women artists whose work reflects the evolution of the pictorial landscape tradition in the Anthropocene era. Carol Barsha's closely-observed nature studies and flowery landscapes are paired with Artemis Herber's mythically-themed, architectonic reliefs. These immersive paintings surround a site-specific installation and soundscape designed by Heather Theresa Clark, utilizing her environmental planning background.

Depicting nature and the environment is one of the most ancient and elemental expressions of art. From cave painting to Dutch still lifes to social practice incorporating life forms, artists have always been attentive and responsive to the world around them. This exhibition spans landscape painting that takes no social or political stance to multi-media painting and sculpture that puts climate change at the center of its meaning.

Volkmar Wentzel Presented by the AU Museum Project Space January 25-May 24, 2020

Volkmar Kurt Wentzel (b. Dresden, 1915-2006) arrived in Washington, DC in the early 1930s. When the Great Depression led to prohibitive housing costs in DC, he moved to Aurora, West Virginia, to join a community with Robert Gates and several other artists who had become close friends. In 1937, back in Washington, architect Erik Menke introduced Volkmar to a book titled Paris De Nuit (1933) by Brassaï, a French photographer. Volkmar was enchanted. He purchased a new camera and began photographing the series "Washington by Night." First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt, out for a stroll one evening, encountered Volkmar and purchased several of his Washington pictures. Volkmar completed his Washington photographs and brought them to National Geographic. He was hired immediately. The event led to his 48-year photographic career as a National Geographic photographer.

Robert Franklin Gates: Paint What You See January 25-May 24, 2020

Robert Franklin Gates: Paint What You See showcases an adventurous artist who greatly influenced the course of Washington art from his arrival from Detroit in 1930, at the age of 24, until his death in 1982 as an AU Professor Emeritus. He was a muralist, painter, printmaker, draftsman, and professor at the Phillips Gallery School and then American University for over forty years. His watercolors earned him early acclaim, signaled by their inclusion in the first very exhibition held at the National Gallery of Art upon its opening in 1941. Gates' paintings can be found in The Phillips Collection, the Baltimore Museum of Art, Dumbarton Oaks, the Smithsonian American Art Museum, and the Corcoran Legacy Collection and the Watkins Memorial Collection at the American University Museum.

Good Form, Decorum, and in the Manner: Portraits from the Collections of Washington Print Club Members

Curated by Tim Doud

January 25-March 15, 2020

Portraits are usually understood in one of two ways: as the depiction of the face of a person, or a representation of someone's impression of a person. This exhibition comprises many works that could be thought of as conventional portraits of individuals in a wide range of media, including woodblock and wood engravings, intaglio prints, mezzotints, monoprints, photography, collage, and an assemblage made with found objects. The show also pushes the boundaries of portraiture by including works that capture the likenesses of animals, places, memories, and events.

Good Form, Decorum, and in the Manner can also be considered a snapshot of the Washington Print Club today by celebrating the prized pieces its members have chosen to highlight. My curatorial interest also lies in the resulting overlaps, intersections, gaps, and dialogues between collectors' collections.

Gallery Talk: Robert Franklin Gates January 25, 5-6PM

AU Museum Director & Curator Jack Rasmussen will present a lecture on Paint What You See, featuring paintings and watercolors by longtime AU Art Department Professor Robert Franklin Gates. Free and open to all, please RSVP to tinyurl.com/aumuseumkatzen.

Winter Opening Reception January 25, 6-9PM

Mix and mingle with artists, curators, and fellow patrons and view six new exhibitions at our Winter opening reception. Free and open to all, no RSVP required.
